

XM Radio is a paid radio service. It should not be censored or controlled. Limiting access to weather information for xm users is silly and potentially dangerous, to motorist traveling in unfamiliar areas that need information about detours for flooding etc. I pay for xm so I can have reliable consistent information available to me, and to force me to search for the local radio channel just to hear the weather when I already have the weather available through the service I pay for is ridiculous, I want to decide what I listen to and that is why I spent the $500 in equipment and the $100+ a year for the choice, its my choice and I have chosen to pay for radio service that is mostly commercial free. I don't think the number of xm users traveling through an area and missing out on the commercials for the local businesses has any impact on their market and does not support the motivation for this weather information issue. The bottom line is they want to advertise and I choose to pay for no advertising.
